from 409 Main Street, Rockland, Maine.

NEWSPAPER HISTORY

The Rockland Gazette was established in 1846. In 1874 the Courier was established, and consolidated with the Gazette in 1887. The free press was established in 1887, and in 1901 changed its name to the Tribune. These papers consolidated March 17, 1887.

BY THE ROCKLAND PUBLISHING CO.

Subscriptions $2 per year in advance; $2.50 if paid at the end of the year; single copies three cents. Advertising rates based upon circulation and other factors. Communications upon topics of general interest are solicited. Entered at the postoffice at Rockland for circulation at second-class postal rates.

"We do nothing well till we know our worth; nothing best till we forget it."

The Russians are retreating at the front in Manchuria, but the Cossacks are still charging furiously at the rear in Russia.

It is figured out that the total expenses, official and private, on account of the Louisiana Purchase Exhibition were not less than $60,000,000. The fair cost the organization which had control of it about $20,000,000. The accounts are nearly settled up, and it is declared that all debts will be paid, while the city counts as profit the great advertising it has received.

A host of Daniel Webster, in handing him a glass of Madeira out of a dusty and cobwebbed bottle, said that he had made a little calculation that the wine had cost him $2 a glass counting the interest from the time he bought the wine. Webster reached for the bottle and helped himself to a second glass, saying, "I really must stop that confounded interest."

A youth in one of the western states got back heavily at a young woman to whom he was engaged and who saw fit to break the engagement. She sent him a package containing all the letters he had written her and all the little things he had given her. He at once sent back all the letters he had and added a half dozen boxes of face powder and a few packages of rouge. He also wrote her saying that he returned the cosmetics as he thought he had carried at least that much home from her house on his coasts.

A small boy recently wrote to a Pennsylvania legislator asking for a report of the State Fish Commission. The member, who is a relative of the youth, was greatly pleased at the request and exhibited it in the State Capitol. He wrote the boy, however, asking what report was wanted, explaining that a volume was issued yearly. Whether he ever showed the boy's reply to his friends or not, it has leaked out. It reads: "I don't care which year it is. All I want is any old thing heavy enough to press wild flowers."

Henry Clews, the New York banker, was dilating on the dangers of deceit. By way of illustration he told of a society woman who saw in a jeweler's window a collar of pearls that she wanted. She inquired the price and was told $6000. She gave her check for $3000 saying she would send her husband to see the pearls, but the jeweler told her to tell him they cost only $3000. The storekeeper was familiar with that sort of game and agreed. The husband came to see the pearls and that evening told his wife he had bought them. His wife delightedly asked if he had brought home the collar, whereupon he replied: "No dear, I had it sent to my mother. You know, it is her birthday tomorrow."

Charles M. Crandall, who invented the "pigs in clover" puzzle nearly twenty years ago, is dead at Waverly, N. Y. He invented several other toys but the one named was his greatest success. This puzzle became popular all over the country. It was taken up by every body, even invading the senate chamber at Washington. Senator Evans became so fascinated with it that he took the session one morning and soon had half a dozen senators trying their skill in a committee room. It was probably the greatest selling puzzle ever produced. Crandall made a fortune in the business, but died comfortably poor. Some of those who tried the puzzle died in insane hospitals.

An announcement of interest to the legal profession of Maine is that the Ninety-Ninth Maine report of the decisions of the supreme bench of Maine will soon be issued. This volume will contain about 600 pages. While the little sheepskin volume will bear the name of Smith on its cover, its first 150 pages will be the pen of Charles Hamilton Hamlin, the reporter of decisions, whom Mr. Smith follows. Gen. Hamlin had that much of the volume done when Gov. Hill passed the appointment out to the gentleman from Brunswick, at the end of one of the most hotly-contested fights in the history of Maine politics. The forthcoming volume is eagerly awaited by the members of the bar because it contains several important decisions.

DEDICATING THE CROSS.

Speech of Arthur George Smith at Allen's Island, Weymouth Day.

In response to the urgent request of many readers and because of the impossibility to give the space which was denied it at the time, we publish complete the address made by Arthur George Smith at the unveiling of the Weymouth cross at Allen's Island July 5.

There is a famous metaphysician of my acquaintance, the characterist of whose philosophy it is that in search of its goal it first hunts in every nook and cranny of the philosophical world where its goal is not, and then finally, saying "not here, not here," it suddenly turns and manifests triumph to the right spot, and shouts "Eureka!"

May I be permitted to apply to the analogy of my friends of the Maine Historical Society? For nearly 200 years the controversy over Pentecost Harbor has included all the coast of Maine from Boothbay to the noble Penobscot; and the efforts of your honorable society, we can at last say, "I have found it." And the result now seems so perfectly obvious that we are still wondering why we have so long repined at the ignorance of the blight of our town. Hence it is with very great pleasure that we of St. George welcome you here to this little island to help us commemorate the discovery of our ancestry, and to rejoice with us at our entrance upon our inheritance.

On a summer's day, three centuries ago, a hardy British captain and his one-legged mate, after a difficult and perilous voyage across the practically unknown seas, erected a cross on one of these islands in commemoration of the fact that this region which he had named after his patron saint, had been discovered and claimed by a citizen of a Christian nation, Great Britain and by him dedicated to the service of a Christian sovereign, Elizabeth.

The voyages at this period were made not with the motives that prompted those brave hearts that later set foot on Plymouth Rock, the desire of freedom to worship their God after the manner of their fathers; rather were they made in a spirit of adventure, partly from a desire to find a route to Africa or the Orient, and partly to win new dominions for England.

Such voyages, as a rule, lacked the permanent significance of the later expeditions. The expedition of Captain Weymouth in 1619 was of historical importance; for as a result of his discoveries, two years later in 1621 the little Popham Colony of 120 souls was established on the peninsula of Sagadahoc, and with ceremonies of prayer and sermon dedicated the spot to civilization, and themselves to God's service, and inaugurated their government.

Few know that it was the early settlements in this territory which confirmed the title of old England to the New; that years before the Pilgrims set foot on Plymouth sands there were established the title of England to the New; that years before the Pilgrims set foot on Plymouth sands there were established the title of England to the New; that years before the Pilgrims set foot on Plymouth sands there were established the title of England to the New.

Henry Clews, the New York banker, was dilating on the dangers of deceit. By way of illustration he told of a society woman who saw in a jeweler's window a collar of pearls that she wanted. She inquired the price and was told $6000. She gave her check for $3000 saying she would send her husband to see the pearls, but the jeweler told her to tell him they cost only $3000. The storekeeper was familiar with that sort of game and agreed. The husband came to see the pearls and that evening told his wife he had bought them. His wife delightedly asked if he had brought home the collar, whereupon he replied: "No dear, I had it sent to my mother. You know, it is her birthday tomorrow."

A century and a quarter ago, when under the guidance of him whom this country rightly calls its father, these colonies became the United States of America, and selected their own form of Government. The watchword of our international policy was "Friendship toward all, entangling alliances with none." It was felt, and it is felt, that our safety would be best secured by our internal welfare and progress best aided by attending strictly and carefully to our own affairs. And so, for over a century we have kept as completely as possible out of foreign complications. By our steady, consistent policy, we have acquired a reputation as a nation for sincerity, firmness and fairness in all our international dealings, such as is surpassed by that of no other power large or small and of this reputation we may justly be proud.

But man proposes. The disposal of human events is in its ultimate analysis in higher hands than ours. Do not mistake me as unreservedly sanctioning the logic of those who, use the conventional wisdom of the day as a shield wherewith to gloss over other and baser reasons for certain courses of action. The philosophy of determinism and fatalism has yet to demonstrate its right to existence as the guiding principle of the life either of the individual or of the nation. What I do mean is that we have attained our present influence for peace in the family of nations because we have adopted as the guiding principle of our policy the belief that there is an absolute final right or wrong for a nation as well as for an individual, because our statesmen have in the main believed with our private citizen that Truth will not forever remain on the scaffold, nor wrong forever on the throne. Let me repeat, our policy as a nation may have been sometimes misguided,—omnipotence has not yet become one of humanity's attributes—but it has for the greater part been a sincere one. Who can deny that it was our reputation as a nation, the greatest if not indeed the greatest peace powers on earth that brought success to the efforts of our Executive in the recent negotiations for a Peace Conference.

We have become a world power by keeping out of world politics. Secure in position as the greatest power in the Western Hemisphere, we have devoted our attention to our own growth and prosperity. Realizing that a nation disunited and discordant at home must be powerless abroad, we have sought internal unity and harmony. The search was by no means a simple or easy one, and was not accomplished without the greatest civil contest the world has ever known. Bitter as the struggle was, all we who look back upon it today say that it was not necessary to settle the crisis which compromised, however skillfully planned, had only served to postpone, and hence accentuated? Those memorable issues, fortunately are past. We have long ago forgiven our brethren of the North, and they have forgiven us. We know they have forgiven us for our folly in imposing upon them deconstruction under the mistaken idea that we were giving them reconstruction. Mutual respect, the flood of immigration, the need of it has made us more careful of each other's interest than we were before. Never again shall our country be divided by sectional differences, for never again will we allow it to be sold to the north and the south do not understand each other. The different sections are rapidly being drawn together into common bonds of fellowship and unity, that magic link, community of interests. The south is no longer merely an agricultural community. In the land where only a few years ago were woods and fields, are now mines and mills, foundries and factories, rivaling, nay sometimes surpassing those of our own New England, the home of the loom and spindle. As a consequence, the flood of immigration is no longer content with deluging our northern shores alone, but the south is now claiming her share, and thus has contributed to the portion of the heaven needed to sustain this little island of interests. The south is no longer a land where only a few years ago were woods and fields, are now mines and mills, foundries and factories, rivaling, nay sometimes surpassing those of our own New England, the home of the loom and spindle. As a consequence, the flood of immigration is no longer content with deluging our northern shores alone, but the south is now claiming her share, and thus has contributed to the portion of the heaven needed to sustain this little island of interests.

And so we can say that out of the turmoil of this last century of the three that have elapsed since this little island of Pentecost offered her friendly shelter to the first British ship, we can say that into our national life have come wealth, power and unity, and above all the honor that appertains only to a nation whose diplomacy the other powers have learned both to respect and to trust.

No just a word of the future. This year marks not only the anniversary we are here primarily to celebrate but commemorates also what may be a crisis in our national life. A few years ago, our martyred President aroused us to a realization of the fact that our policy of local exclusiveness must to some extent be abandoned. This policy of local exclusiveness has been the policy of our nation for years that are past been our salvation. But within the last few years, conditions have, to some extent at least, materially altered. In the words of a recent English statesman, "We are now in the midst of a great change, a change with the edge of European interests, than ever before as the result of our national expansion. We have possessions in far distant seas where 19 years ago no American thought he would ever set the Stars and Stripes floating over territory of the United States. We are not far from Hong Kong nor the German and French possessions in the far East." And now comes the message from the old England to the New; given only a few days ago by England's premier. To our newly appointed ambassador in London, Lord Curzon, he has indicated the desire of the United States to keep themselves as little entangled as may be with the complex political relations of the old world, and to maintain as far as possible their absolute and extreme purity that doctrine is likely to be permanently maintained. So great a nation as the United States, owing so much to giving so much to the civilization of old Europe, sharing its learning and advancing its science, can hardly expect to be able to share all the honors of the world, and to maintain its absolute and extreme purity that doctrine is likely to be permanently maintained. So great a nation as the United States, owing so much to giving so much to the civilization of old Europe, sharing its learning and advancing its science, can hardly expect to be able to share all the honors of the world, and to maintain its absolute and extreme purity that doctrine is likely to be permanently maintained. So great a nation as the United States, owing so much to giving so much to the civilization of old Europe, sharing its learning and advancing its science, can hardly expect to be able to share all the honors of the world, and to maintain its absolute and extreme purity that doctrine is likely to be permanently maintained.

Briefly, this message means that the time has come for this nation to abandon her policy of isolation, and to take her share in the politics of the world, and thus accept our rightful responsibilities in the family of nations. The eternal significance of such a call from such a source is evident. Two paths are now presented to us where none was only one. It is not for me to discuss their relative merits. I have only this to say; whichever one we choose, our ultimate safety as a nation consists in our faithful adherence to those old ideals of national life and national conduct which have heretofore been our guidance.

It may be that we shall see fit still to continue along the path our fathers have blazed for us, or it may be that heeding the call that comes from England's statesman, we shall feel it our duty to go forth with the nation that is above all others nearest to us in heritage and sympathies, to take a more active and possibly militant part in world affairs. In either case, I repeat, let it be our prayer and our endeavor that our leaders, following the right as God gives them, to see the right, will keep our country's policy true to those ideals of conduct which have made her what she is today, the ideals for which this cross we here unveil today, for which we have ever stood and ever will stand, not for theology and dogma alone, our nation was founded in part as a protest against that, but for the ideals of justice, honor and truth, friendship and sincerity. Such weapons as these, far more surely than armies and navies, will make this nation what Sir William Mather, a prominent English leader, has already termed it, the moral leader of the world, able in the future, as we have been in the past, to urge what we have present on grounds of moral rather than physical force.

TO WIDOW'S ISLAND.

Mildly Insane Patients Have Been Carried for Summer Outing.

Thirty patients from the Augusta insane hospital and 20 from the Eastern Maine hospital at Bangor were taken to Widow's Island last week and are now quartered in the hospital building, which, by vote of the state Legislature, was fitted up for the trial of this experiment. The patients are of the mildly insane class and if their outing at Widow's Island proves as beneficial as expected it will become a part of the regular treatment. The Legislature appropriated $600 for putting the hospital building into proper condition and making the other necessary arrangements. In the latter part of June Supt. Sanborn addressed the following letter to relatives of the patients whom he had selected for the seashore outing:

"I desire to state that a summer resort on Widow's Island, in Penobscot Bay, is being made ready for the reception of the patients of this institution, and the one at Bangor, and will be opened for occupation by the first of next month. This property has been presented by the general government of the State of Maine, for charitable purposes, and the building is very commodious, and is thoroughly equipped for the comfort and maintenance of 40 or more patients, with sufficient number of attendants and others to care for them during their temporary sojourn on the sea shore. The island is supplied with excellent water, and the house is equipped with heat, electric lighting and telephone communication. The property is passed over to trustees of the two hospitals and is to be dedicated to the treatment of such cases as the superintendents of the two hospitals believe will be benefited by a temporary seashore sojourn.

"The first party will be there a month, when they will return to the two hospitals and others take their places. If the experiment proves satisfactory, we are very hopeful that this auxiliary in the treatment of our patients will result in much benefit to all who take advantage of the opportunities it offers. The state has appropriated sufficient means so that no extra charge will be made for the support of any patient who avails himself of this privilege. Will you please write me on receipt of this if it is your desire that your relative shall become one of the party?"

The responses to the addressed letter were most hearty, and assuring, and each family indicated their desire that their relative be allowed to take advantage of the opportunities which they believe such a contemplated plan would secure.

IN A THICK FOG.

Sch. Melissa A. Willey and Sch. W. D.
Hilton Were in Collision.

About 5 o'clock last Thursday morning when off Seguin, the three masted schooner Melissa A. Willey, bound from Clark's Island to Norfolk with a cargo of granite, was in collision with the three masted schooner W. D. Hilton, lumber laden, bound from Bangor to New York, with the result that the Hilton's port bulwarks were strained so that she sprang a leak. The Willey had considerable of her rigging injured and her jibboom carried away and had to be towed into Portland by the tug Scandinavia.

The accident occurred in a thick fog and no blame is attached by either captain to the other. The schooners were sounding their fog horns but the crew of the Willey say that they could not at times distinguish the blazes from the Hilton's horn and presently they were so close together that a collision could not be averted. The Willey bore down onto the Hilton with the result that the latter's port bulwarks were quite badly damaged, but the schooner was able to come into port without assistance and went to the marine railway at South Portland where repairs will be made at once. The Willey's principal damage was to her rigging and the loss of her jibboom, so it was necessary to accept the assistance of a tow into port. The captains of the schooner had a conference over the accident and it was decided that each should make his own repairs and consider it lucky that the affair was no more disastrous than it was.

WHY IT SUCCEEDS.

Because It Is For One Thing Only and Rockland Is Learning This.

Nothing can be done for everything. Doing one thing well brings success. Doan's Kidney Pills do one thing only. They're for sick kidneys. They cure backache, every kidney ail. Here is evidence to prove it. C. E. Tibbets, brakeman on the Maine Central R. R., running between Rockland and Brunswick, and living at Wiscasset, Me., says: "Judging from my own experience I believe Doan's Kidney Pills will relieve any case of backache caused from kidney trouble. I used them six years ago when teaming in Wiscasset. I had been taken with an acute attack of backache, and as my father had found great benefit from using Doan's Kidney Pills I began using them, and it required only a short treatment to entirely relieve me. Four years ago I began working for the Maine Central R. R. and the jarring and jolting of riding on trains caused a return of backache. Remembering my experience with Doan's Kidney Pills I again used them and they promptly stopped the attack. I keep a supply on hand all the time, and use a few doses occasionally to keep me in good condition."

In Boston.

Interesting Items—Personal and Otherwise Gathered for Courier-Gazette Readers.

Boston, Mass., July 7, '05. S. Dean Graves will visit his old home in Knox County, the present month. Letters received from Gen. Cliley and party, dated at Glenwood Springs, Colo., report their return homeward. Everett N. Curtes and Benjamin Wood are back to the city from a visit in Camden.

Miss Edna Morse of Waltham has gone to Thomaston for a month's vacation. Mr. and Mrs. Harry M. Watts, whose wedding was announced early in June, are now pleasantly situated in their new home, Park street, Dorchester. Mrs. Ada Allen will spend the summer among the New Hampshire mountains.

Harry Shibles, who is connected with the Travelers Insurance Company in this city, is spending his annual vacation at his old home, Thomaston. W. H. Wakefield, who has just returned from a fishing trip in Maine, on his way home he called on Dr. A. H. Sturtevant in Augusta. Dr. Sturtevant was at one time a resident of Rockland, and will be remembered as a popular clerk in the Wiggin drug store. Mr. Wakefield was royally entertained at the Sturtevant Camp, Webber Pond.

For the vaudeville bill at Keith's the week of July 10 the names of some of the best entertainers in their line in the New England states are announced, including Ray L. Rocco, the popular mimetic comedian, who will be remembered for his excellent work as Myron Cooper in "York State Folks"; Henry V. Donnelly, of "natural gas" fame; in a one-act farce, entitled "Mr. and Mrs. Naggs" made famous by a series of stories in the New York World; Mosher, Houghton and Mosher, in one of the best comedy and trick bicycle acts in the business; Matthews and Ashley, cross-tie conversational comedians; Misses Cook and Clinton, experts with rifle and pistol; McPhee and Hill, in a great exhibition on the horizontal bar; Ferguson and Watson, conversational comedians; Murphy and Francis, two of the best "real comic" entertainers in the business; and Theresa Donovan, who comes direct from Paris, a pleasing and talented prima donna soprano. The Falletts woman's orchestra will make an entire change of selections including a solo from one of the members of the entire new list of motion pictures will be exhibited in the biography.

At the Colonial Theatre, Boston, beginning Monday evening, July 17, and for a period of six weeks, with Saturday matinees, Klau & Erlanger's superb imaginative spectacle, "The Pearl and the Pumpkin," will be presented. Monday, July 17th, will be the first time on any stage of this great production which with its hundreds of people, its many wonderful scenes, its bizarre and beautiful costumes, and its ingenious electrical and mechanical effects, will undoubtedly prove a tremendous theatrical sensation. Besides being the biggest spectacle of American origin ever made, it will be the first of all in which English scenes, characters, and incidents are portrayed. A fortune has been expended in the realization of all the ingenious ideas of the authors and the gigantic production has been in preparation for over a year. The title, "The Pearl and the Pumpkin," is owed to provoke curiosity. What has a pearl to do with a pumpkin? It takes ten scenes of the most magnificent description to satisfactorily explain this to the audience; some of them laid among the green hills of Vermont, some at the bottom of the sea, and others in the charming island of Bermuda. Quaint types of New England character figure throughout the play, with still quainter types new to the stage, among which is the remarkable Corn Dodger. And one of those New Englanders is changed into a pump—just that is the playwright's secret.

The scale of prices for the extraordinary attraction is $1.50, $1.75 cents and 50 cents, out of town orders for seats, accompanied by post office or express orders, will be filled from now on for any performance. All communications should be addressed to the manager of the Colonial Theatre, Boston.

A little life may be sacrificed to an hour's delay. Cholera infantum, dysentery, diarrhea come suddenly. Only safe plan—have Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry always on hand.

HOT WEATHER DRINKS.

Of the Kind That Has No Fear of the Sturgis Commission.

Strawberry or raspberry punch is very delicious. Squeeze the juice from the berries, and pour two cupfuls of this upon a cupful of granulated sugar. When the sugar is dissolved, add the juice of a lemon and a quart of cold water. Have it very cold before serving, and strain the top with a handful of the whole berries.

Teed chocolate deserves to be better known. Make it as you would any good chocolate. Stir together over the fire four tablespoonfuls of grated chocolate and three tablespoonfuls of granulated sugar with three cupfuls of hot milk and one cupful of hot water, and let simmer for fifteen minutes. Add one teaspoonful of vanilla and a pinch of salt, beat up well with a wire egg-beater, and add to become perfectly cold. Serve in tall glasses and with a spoonful of vanilla ice cream or unsweetened whipped cream on top.

A temperance egg-nog is sometimes acceptable for those who must take nourishment as well as refreshment with their beverages. Beat the whites and the yolks of the eggs separately and very thoroughly, and add sugar in the proportion of two tablespoonfuls of this and half a cupful of cold water to each egg. Beat all together with a wire egg-beater, whip in the frothed whites, a tablespoonful of lemon-juice, and a very little of the grated rind. Turn in to glasses, and heap whipped cream on top of each glass.

Grape-juice is a very delicious drink. To make it, rub two lumps of sugar upon a lemon and two upon an orange until they are colored with the oil of the fruit skin. On these squeeze the juice of the orange and lemon, and let them stand for half an hour. Pour on them a pint of water, and add sugar on the ice until well chilled. Turn the liquid over a large lump of ice in a punch bowl, and add to the cup a dozen each of strawberries, cherries and raspberries. Add a pint of some good charged water—Woman's Home Companion for July.

Sick Wives and Daughters.

You have often seen them with pale faces, poor appetite, head and back ache, symptoms common to the sex. Fathers and mothers, lose no time in securing Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. It will cost only one dollar and is much cheaper than sickness. Write to Dr. David Kennedy's Sons, Rondout, N. Y., for a free sample bottle.

NORTH DEER ISLE

Mr. and Mrs. Mark C. Whitmore have gone to Camden for a week.

Miss Bessie Scott has gone to Bar Harbor, where she will be a guest of Mrs. Raymond Joy a few days.

Miss Ethel Thompson has returned from Medford, Mass., where she spent the winter and spring.

Miss Mattie Adams of Medford, Mass., is visiting Mrs. Charles Thompson.

Leon Simonds of Worcester, Mass., is spending his vacation at the Reach.

Miss Mary Knight and Miss Mattie Knight are attending the summer school at Orono.

Franklin Hardy, who has been employed on the schooner Ellen Baxter, arrived home Tuesday.

Frank Hardy, who has the contract for the mail, made his first trip Saturday.

Mrs. Nathan Lowe has gone to Bangor to join her husband, who has arrived there in the schooner Ellen Baxter.

About 50 friends of Capt. and Mrs. George Torrey and Capt. and Mrs. Ernest Torrey made a serene party at the home of the mother, Mrs. Alonzo Hutchinson, last Friday evening. The company was very cordially received and fruit bonbons and cigars were served.

A large bay horse was kindred here Thursday of last week from Boston for Arthur Campbell.

Elmer Hardy met with a serious accident one day last week while mowing hay in his field. He had stepped in front of the machine when the horse started, cutting Mr. Hardy's foot across the instep in a very grave manner, severing the cord and artery. Two physicians were called and he was made comfortable. Fears are entertained that he may be permanently crippled.

The Diamond Cure. The latest news from Paris is, that they have discovered a diamond cure for consumption or pneumonia, it will, however be best for you to take that great remedy mentioned by W. T. McGee, of Vanleer, Tenn. "I had a cough, for fourteen years. MISS GENEVIEVE MAY.
CATARH OF STOMACH CURED BY PE-RU-NA.

Miss Genevieve May, 1815 S. Meridian St., Indianapolis, Ind., Member Second High School Alumni Ass'n, writes:

"Peruna is the finest regulator of a disordered stomach I have ever found. It certainly deserves high praise, for it is skillfully prepared, and has cured me of a neglected case of catarrh of the stomach. My food had long ceased to be of any good and only distressed me after eating. I was nauseated, had heartburn and headaches, and felt run down completely. But in two weeks after I took Peruna I was a changed person. A few bottles of the medicine made a great change, and in three months my stomach was cleared of catarrh, and my entire system in a better condition."

SOME GRANITE CHIPS.

The granite business remains about the same as earlier in the summer. The usual number of men is employed here although there is no particular rush of work.

Quiet reigns supreme at Vinalhaven but there are those who come from there who assert that the business is not so good as it was some time ago. The stillness and inactivity are only that which precedes a storm of business activity. The Bodwell Company is making some extensive and costly improvements in the way of compressors, etc., and when completed there appears to be little doubt but that the plant will be one of the best equipped in the country. Business is good at Waldoboro with all hands working.

Concerning the apt discussion of air in cutting sheds and the effects of cold air on the human system a prominent granite cutter has the following to say: "The urgency of this ventilation question can not be over estimated. It is of much more importance than any question of wages, hours of labor, or such a trumpery matter as weekly pay of which we have heard a good deal lately. Wages is often forced up by powerful trade unions with the result that the workmen are obliged to strain their energies to the utmost limit in order to retain a place at all in the strenuous race for a livelihood. Then by and by the necessities of life are raised, sometimes beyond the ratio of the advance in wages, and the workman has to be content with the somewhat doubtful benefit of having to work harder for the increased money he earns, and which increased money has little or no more purchasing power than his former smaller wages had. I fully believe in peace and am all lines of industrial and social activity, and it seems to me as if the time were come when the doctrine of getting better conditions to work under could be preached, in preference to that of raising wages or getting it often than semi-monthly. Compared with other tradesmen, the lot of the average granite cutter is fairly satisfactory in so far as wages and hours of labor are concerned. Improve his working conditions so that he will be less liable to be laid off prematurely by pulmonary disease, and I think he will, or ought to be satisfied for some years to come."

EAST WARREN

The grass is looking finely in this section.

Mrs. John Dean has returned from Massachusetts.

Mrs. S. F. Keep was a recent guest of relatives here.

Charles Ames of Boston called on friends here this week.

John Lane has purchased a new horse.

Frederic Copeland and T. P. Carroll were in Camden this week on business.

Mrs. Eva Woodris, who has been here on a few days' visit, has returned to her home in Massachusetts.

Proddy and wife, were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Augustus Peabody last Sunday.

Walter Lane and wife of West Rockport were recent guests of relatives here.

J. R. Black of Portland was in town recently.

Miss Eleanor Clark has returned from a visit with relatives in Belfast.

Al Payson is visiting relatives in Lewiston this week.

Byron Shaw is the guest of relatives in Belfast this week.

Several of our farmers will commence haying next Monday. The crop will be about an average one.

WALDOBORO

Mr. and Mrs. James M. Dow and two daughters, of Hartford, Conn., are at T. S. Brown's, Main street, for the summer. Mrs. Dow is a native of Waldoboro and a cousin of Mrs. Brown. Mr. Dow formerly resided here and the entire family look forward to their annual vacation in Waldoboro with much satisfaction.

Moses R. Mathews of Warren, was in town Friday on business.

Mr. and Mrs. H. O. Trafton of Medford, Mass., were here Saturday, en route to Mrs. Trafton's old home at North Waldoboro.

Otis M. Kaler of Somerville, Mass., is enjoying his annual visit to Waldoboro. Mr. Kaler is a veteran of the 21st Maine Regiment and is now an employee of the Charlestown Navy Yard.

Mrs. Fannie Davis and two children of New Jersey are at Mrs. Charles Comery's.

So far as we have been able to learn the graduation exercises of the Waldoboro High school, Friday night of last week passed off with success. The church was crowded and the graduating class acquitted themselves with honor. The graduation was followed by a ball in Clark's Hall.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Standish of Boston are at Miles Standish's, Mrs. Standish's sister, Mrs. Metcalf, and two children of Winthrop, Mass., are at Hotel Davis.

Miss Jessie and Fay Keene are home from the Wesleyan University, Middletown, Conn., for three months' vacation.

E. A. Glidden & Co. are very busy with orders for monumental work, requiring the employment of extra help. They recently set a granite monument in the German cemetery for E. J. H. Miller and family and have four more in the sheds besides a large amount of tablet work.

Capt. Millard Wade is at home. E. A. Glidden and four children of Bridgeport, Conn., Miss Etta Glidden of Boston and a daughter of Samuel Glidden of Medford, are at Martin's Point.

Ralph Davis succeeds Maurice Morton as carrier of the Friendship mail. Mr. Morton has been very popular with the traveling people and they will be pleased to know that he will continue to run a regular carriage from Waldoboro to Friendship. He carried down nine passengers Saturday.

Carl Gray, vice president and general manager of the Frisco R. R. System, has arrived here from St. Louis in his private car, accompanied by his family and his father, Col. Oliver C. Gray, and wife. They expect to spend several weeks in the vicinity. Colonel Gray is a native of Waldoboro and now a resident of Little Rock, Ark.

The Cause of Many Sudden Deaths.

There is a disease prevailing in this country most dangerous because so deceptive. Many sudden deaths are caused by it—heart disease, pneumonia, heart failure or apoplexy are often the result of kidney disease. If kidney trouble is allowed to advance the kidney-poisoned blood will attack the vital organs or the kidneys will break down and waste away cell by cell.

Bladder troubles most always result from a derangement of the kidneys and a cure is obtained quickly by a proper treatment of the kidneys. If you are feeling badly you can make no mistake by taking Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy.

It corrects inability to hold urine and scalding pain in passing it, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often during the day, and to get up many times during the night. The mild and extraordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases.

Swamp-Root is pleasant to take and sold by all druggists in fifty-cent and one-dollar sized bottles. You may have a sample bottle of this wonderful new discovery and a book that tells all about it, both free by mail, Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. When writing mention reading this generous offer in this paper.

Don't make any mistake, but remember the name Swamp-Root, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y., on every bottle.

Aug. 16—Thomaston, Baptist Circle will have musical, sale and tea at Mrs. J. E. Walker's.

Aug. 20—Fair and sale by Grace Chapter, O. E. S., in Masonic Hall, Thomaston.

The exterior woodwork of the city building is being painted.

The four bull terrier pups in the window of Kallach's Furniture call the attention of every passer-by.

There will be no prayer meeting at the Congregational church this evening, owing to repairs being made there.

A. Sherman, a prominent Boston merchant has been in this city the past few days, waiting the arrival of his yacht.

The regular monthly meeting of Canton Lafayette takes place tomorrow night, and there will be degree work.

Deputy Sheriff Daniel E. White of Vinalhaven has been appointed turnkey at the county jail, vice E. O. Heald.

The dental offices will close at 1 p. m. on Saturdays through July and August. They have been pulling for the vacation a long time.

The late Fred H. Berry carried life insurance to the amount of about $20,000, being one of the heaviest policyholders in this section.

The regular meetings of the W. C. T. U., which have been held in the Y. M. C. A. rooms have been discontinued until the first of September.

Anderson Camp, S. of V., has its regular meeting tomorrow night. The members of the drum corps are especially requested to be present, as they will have an interesting proposition to consider.

The ladies of the Methodist church are invited to a social at the home of Mrs. Rose Giddens, Elm street, Wednesday evening. There is to be a business meeting and all members are cordially invited to be present.

The fishermen bring in reports that dogfish are thick to the westward, and that they have nearly paralyzed the industry. Many of the trawlers have given up in disgust, while there are others who find zest in fighting the dogfish at its own game.

About 100 hungry Grangers partook of the bountiful supper served at Sheriff Tolman's residence last Friday by the Grange Circle. A goodly sum was netted. The Grange fair this fall will be the best yet. By the way, isn't it about time to hear from the "only Reub?"

Friday of this week Golden Rod chapter O. E. S. will have another of their enjoyable picnics, this time at Pleasant Beach, the guests of Mrs. C. E. Rising. Teams will leave Berry Bros. stable at 9 a. m. Fare for the round trip 50 cents. All visiting members of the order are cordially invited.

The Sprague house on Limerock street has been painted. N. B. Allen has had concrete walks laid on his premises. The block occupied by Franz M. Simmons' store and Hanley's restaurant has been painted. The Shields house on the corner is being extensively repaired.

One of the first acts of the Knox County Automobile Association was to notify selectmen of various Knox county towns in which the laws concerning guide-boards on the roads. The law requires suitable guide posts at all cross-roads, and they are certainly of great benefit to the public at large as well as to auto owners.

The Daily Record-Miner published at Juneau, Alaska, announces the arrival there of Capt. John Ross, Col. Harry P. Ross, and Mr. and Mrs. C. Vey Holman. In a personal letter Mr. Holman writes that the daylight in Alaska now is such that newspapers may be read out-doors all night. The Alaska newspaper was published June 29 and was received here July 10, showing that the journey from the extreme northwest is now accomplished in less than a week, a fact that it was at the outbreak of the mining fever a few years ago.

The monthly meeting of the Rockland Board of Trade will be held in the common council room this Tuesday evening at 7 o'clock. James H. Namara is to present a proposition from a shirt waist manufacturer who desires to locate here. He gives employment to several hundred people. He is now located in New York and wants to get away from big cities on account of help. The question of entertaining naval officers and men will also come up for discussion. It will be an interesting meeting and a large attendance is requested.

The new carpet is being laid in the Congregational church this week, and those who attend services there next Sunday will find that a very pleasing transformation has been wrought. There are about 30 yards of carpet—a Lowell loom, and it is being laid by Edward Gonia, who is in charge of that department at Simonton's dry goods store, where the carpet was bought. The work is being supervised by the church by Mrs. Carlton F. Snow, assisted by Miss Martha B. May. Emma Cobb and Charlotte Buffum have also kindly volunteered their services.

City Marshal Fernald shows no signs of abatement in enforcing the prohibition. At 7 o'clock last Saturday he seized two five-gallon kegs of whiskey which had been landed from the steamer Monaghan. Sunday morning he seized a barrel of beer from the Boston boat. Yesterday afternoon he seized two sugar barrels at the Maine Central depot. One contained ale and the other had 242 half-pint bottles of whiskey. The latter barrel was addressed to a prominent citizen, who said that it was his if it contained port. The barrel was not delivered. Its mate was addressed to a family on Shaw avenue whose name is not in the directory or known to the authorities.

Major Havestick, special inspector of the treasury department, has been in this city Saturday making an official visit to the U. S. federal building. After a thorough inspection of the building and grounds he stated that he found things in so good condition, with everything kept at such a high degree of efficiency, that he should take pleasure in making a special report to the department upon those things. "I can say," remarked the Major, "that I have not found a building in the whole country that has given me greater pleasure. I want to commend your janitor for his faithfulness and intelligence." The custodian took occasion to remark upon the fact that the work was severe upon one man and that he had applied to the department for an assistant to the janitor, as application which Major Havestick stated he should heartily endorse.

"But there is one thing," said the Major in conclusion, "that I have to most seriously complain of. I notice that your janitor tries to keep the postoffice corridors clear, and would succeed but for the filthy persons who spit on the floor and walls. It does seem as though men might be more decent. I will say this—if at any time you will send me the name of a person who so spits in this building I will give him a lesson he never will forget."

The next big event on the local calendar is the band meet of Aug. 8, particulars of which are published elsewhere in this issue.

With Fourth of July and the Waymouth celebration of its hands Knox county is now in a better position to withstand the heated term.

The extensive repairs which have been made to the hook and ladder building include a new and substantial floor, of which the building stood greatly in need.

Rodney I. Thompson who has been confined to his home for some weeks with rheumatic fever, is now able to be down town and attend in some measure to his law practice.

Arthur S. Macomber has been wearing a bandaged head the past week or so as the result of a clip which he received from the starting bar of an engine while working at High Island.

Hon. F. B. Torrey was the guest over Sunday of his nephew, George E. Torrey. Mr. Torrey is a former collector of the port of Bath. Saturday night he made a fraternal call upon Collector Wright.

An excursion party from Bangor, numbering about 300 persons, came here on the steamer Verona Sunday afternoon. They were much interested in the fleet of eight warships anchored in the outer harbor, a sight that Bangor is likely to witness.

The regular Tuesday night dances at Penobscot View Grange hall will be given under the management of Messrs. Will Bird, John Bird and Edward Brown. This is one of the series of private dances which have proved so enjoyable.

"An Evening With the Choir" is in preparation by the First Baptist Choral Association for Sunday the 23d. It is expected that Major H. M. Lord, the founder of the association, will be here and take part, and his daughter Ruth will also sing.

W. J. Robertson and crew go to Matineus this week where they will build a Congregational church.

The crowd on the street Saturday night was probably the largest since Rockland celebrated State Day in Old Home Week some years ago. The concert by the Texas band and the fine fireworks were the contributing causes.

Capt. A. B. Norton of the schooner Methebesee was working at a dump cart while working at the South Railway a few days ago, and the heavy cart fell upon him. Dr. Wasegatt found that he was obliged to place his patient under ether in order to remove the latter's clothes. Capt. Norton will be laid up some weeks, but will recover unless something unforeseen sets in.

The second and one-half house at the corner of Park and Pleasant streets, occupied by John Fred Folkner, was burned early Saturday morning. That it was the work of an incendiary seems almost certain. The fire had gained such headway when discovered that Mr. Folkner and family could save but few of their personal effects and furniture.

The fire department went to the scene, but was perfectly helpless, owing to the absence of water. The house was comparatively new one and the loss on it and the furniture will be about $1200. It is understood that he had no insurance.

About 1 o'clock Sunday morning six natives of Finland and two Rockland boys had quite a serious mixup near the abandoned quarry on Limerock street. Knives were in evidence and the only wonder is that severe wounds were not inflicted. One of the nearby residents telephoned for the police and the patrol wagon with Officers Landers, Levensaler and Hayden speedily arrived on the scene, but the parties escaped in the darkness. The officers made careful search but were unable to find them as they had about a minute start and darkness to shield them. One of the men was knocked down and out but his comrades carried him with them when they ran.

The custodian of Rockland's federal building was authorized by the treasury department to pave with asphalt the driveways on the east and west sides of the building, and he has contracted with H. P. Howard to do the work. This will quiet the asphalting just done on School street with the granite paving of Limerock street and greatly add to the appearance of that central part of the city. In this connection it is worthy of mention that a matter long in dispute, namely the jurisdiction of the wide driveway lying west of the building, it has been generally understood that this was government property, and the custodian always was interviewed whenever permission was desired to hold public meetings there. Mr. Fuller obtained a copy of the survey from the department at Washington, which showed that the government lot extended only to a point 17 feet 3 inches west of the curb, the remaining part of the driveway (some 25 feet) belonging either to the city or to the two estates adjoining. So far as is known—the matter, we think, has not been officially investigated—the roadway never has been laid out and accepted by the city, but has existed as a traveled way at least since 1873—for how much longer we do not know. As the government is to concrete only its 17 feet of this way it will be necessary for the city to join in covering the other portion.

Two prominent ladies from a neighboring town died at the Thorndike a few days ago. On their way to the dining room they met clerk John L. Donohue whom they knew very well, as indeed, who does not? Knowing that Rockland was under the ban of the Sturgis law they sought to have some fun at John's expense. "We would like some champagne," remarked one of the ladies. "All right," said John, without moving a muscle. "Do you mean that we can really have?" queried the lady in astonishment. "Sure," was the answer. The ladies continued to the dining room thinking of the matter a joke, although how much of a joke they did not realize until later. Meantime John summoned a waiter and instructed him to carry the ladies' table an imitation bottle of champagne. He had been brought from New York by his friend Denny. It was a peach of a bottle, surrounded by the most natural looking ice, and in the aridity of Sturgisland it loomed up like the breakfast table flash light on a dark night. By the time the waiter had placed it on the ladies' table and the envious guests had begun to stare in that direction that bottle was six feet tall and John was fairly talking aloud. At least so it seemed to the ladies, whose amused expression had given place to one of almost horror. Calling Mr. Donohue to the table they inquired what he meant by placing them in such a humiliating position. "Didn't you ask for champagne?" said John. The ladies confessed that they did but were only joking; they didn't dream the bottle was serving it on the table. "Well, have some anyway," said John, whereupon he removed the top of the sham bottle. We draw the curtain on the tableau that followed, but in a neighboring town which is not beyond the reach of street cars, it isn't quite safe to tell two ladies that the lid is off in Rockland.

The handsomest native strawberries which have been seen in Rockland this season came from the gardens of W. C. Laikin at Glen Cove. Several boxes have been on exhibition at Whitney's fruit store giving rise to many questions and much admiration.

The Board of Managers of the Home for Aged Women held their monthly meeting yesterday at the home of the president. Plans for the fair were discussed, and it was decided to hold their July fair on the 26th day.

The Sunday run of the Knox County Automobile Association was to Ashmore, where the 22 members of the party were delightedly entertained at Mr. and Mrs. Orel E. Davies' bungalow. Clam chowder, fresh from its native element, was one feature of the delicious lunch. The president and his wife proved their capacity as entertainers. Next Sunday's run will be to Mr. Rising's cottage, Pleasant Beach.

THE MINORITY

By FREDERICK TREVOR HILL

CHAPTER IV.

It was past three o'clock in the afternoon. The ticker in Trundell, Croyned & Co.'s office had clicked and whirled its final quotations, spelled "good-night," made a trial of its alphabet for morning uses and stopped. The customers' room with its light blue haze of tobacco smoke seemed to take on a different aspect the moment the ticker ceased talking, just as the familiar surroundings of the ocean liner seem to change as soon as the timeless screw stops turning. The well-dressed, cheerful watcher of quotations tore a leaf from his pad, remarked to the nearest customer that "the close looked mighty well for the opening to-morrow," and passed into the clerical department. Mr. Croyned emerged from his private room and spoke a few words to each customer, whispering earnestly with one, looking down on the floor or out of the window while another spoke to him, listening with the air which says, "Go on, old man! I'm drinking in every word you say, but I don't want to let the others know how important I think it." But if the communication lasted too long, Mr. Croyned would turn suddenly, place a hand on the speaker's shoulder and say: "By Jove, I think you're right! I want to talk with you about that to-morrow," and this would be accompanied by a look which would send the customer off convinced of having made a decided impression upon Cornelius Croyned.

One by one the customers drifted away until Mr. Croyned was alone. Then he lit a cigarette and moved to the window, out of the window, one foot on the cushioned window-seat, his elbow perched on his hand, and his chin resting on his bent knee. Mr. Croyned never seemed to be busy. But the customers who made this observation were not to blame for their error. The junior partner's work was done mainly by his left hand. That the most important business of Wall street is transacted after the ticker ceases is something which customers never seem to grasp. Perhaps if they did they might cease to be customers.

Thus Mr. Croyned, staring out of the window at the marble wall across the narrow street, was merely taking a short recess before beginning the real work of the day.

"Come along, Nell. He's here." Croyned turned and saw Mr. Trundell standing at the threshold of his private office, his hand on the door-knob. The junior partner tossed his cigarette aside and entered the elder man's room.

The personality of the owner of this room was in entire harmony with its general air of luxury. Mr. Richard Trundell was a man about 50 years of age, full-blooded and a trifle portly. Had he not carried himself so well and dressed with such care, nothing could have saved him from being considered fat. His face was typical of high living, and the little tell-tale sacks under his eyes gave him a sleepy and sometimes a heavy look.

But those who had seen the gentleman clean-shaven never trusted him implicitly or sealed long on his sleepy look. Without his mustache Mr. Trundell showed a mouth as cruel and hard as any ever seen in a human face. It was a large mouth with thin lips drawn tightly across the teeth and corners drooping—a sneering, sensual, animal mouth, which laughter, only made savage and anger brutal. Every feature of the man's face was in harmony with his mouth, but Mr. Trundell's lip was seldom shaved.

Croyned, seeing no visitor in the room, looked inquiringly at his partner.

Mr. Trundell settled himself before the fire with a click to the blaze, spread his legs apart, and answered the unspoken question by jerking his head toward the private hall. Croyned nodded comprehendingly.

"Are we to go into this thing, Dick?" he asked in a low voice.

"I haven't fully worked it out yet."

"Well, what stand are we to take?"

"That's just what I wanted to talk with you about. I rather think it's a better and bigger thing than appears at first sight, but there may be a hitch somewhere. You know the general scheme, but draw him out until we have all the particulars. Don't let him get away and don't commit us to anything. By Friday or Saturday I'll have worked out whether it's good for little, nothing, or much. I think you'd better go now and come back in about ten minutes' time—accidental-like. If he thinks we're consulting, he'll be too close-mouthed."

Trundell rang the bell as his junior partner left the room. "Show Mr. Harlan in," he ordered, as a clerk answered the summons.

When the visitor appeared at the door the head of the firm was busy writing letters.

"How do you do, Mr. Harlan?" he exclaimed, without rising from his seat, and holding out his left hand in greeting. "Sorry to keep you waiting, but I had some pressing correspondence on hand and wanted to complete it, so we wouldn't be interrupted. No, not at all—sit down. I'm just finishing. Croyned will be here in a moment. Reynolds, look for Mr. Croyned and tell him Mr. Harlan is here. Have a cigar, won't you? How splendidly you're looking! Been on a vacation?"

"No—too busy for vacations just now; but work always agrees with me, and there's no place suits me so well as this seaside resort."

"How do you do, Mr. Harlan?" said Croyned coming into the room. "Well, how goes the syndicate, anyway?"

"I think everything is ready if you gentlemen are. I have all the necessary facts and figures, and the assurance of co-operation from practically every important interest involved."

"Including Kennard?"

"No; but he will come in."

"How do you know that?"

"I know it, Mr. Croyned, because I have never yet failed to put through any operation once undertaken, and I shall not make an exception in this instance."

"That's all right; but do you know how important Kennard is?"

"I don't think I underestimate him."

"But you know, don't you, that the thing can't go through without him?"

"I certainly do not."

"Do you mean to say you would attempt it in the face of his opposition?"

"Most assuredly. If for no other reason, as a means of obtaining his co-operation."

Mr. Croyned looked toward the window with a quiet smile.

"I don't believe you know the man you're dealing with," he answered after a pause. "You will pardon me, Mr. Harlan, if I say that had I been engineering this deal I would have begun with Kennard and let the others follow. He's not accustomed to following."

Mr. Harlan gazed calmly into the forehead of his young critic, but there was a pleasant smile on his lips which offset the dangerous light in his eyes.

"Possibly that would have been easier, but the same result will be reached when he does join us."

"Yes, but until then there is no use talking business."

"You will not undertake the matter until Kennard is included. Is that what you mean?"

"It is certainly a new proposition."

"Well, of course, you must decide for yourselves. I would like to have had you people finance the thing because you've got the necessary life and snap. It goes without saying, that Kennard must be with us in the end, but I have to work in my own way. With me the matter does not have controlling influence, because I know the combination is such that neither Kennard nor any other individual manufacturer can stop us once it is in motion. However, if you cannot indorse the proposition in the present aspect of affairs, I must regretfully carry it elsewhere."

Mr. Harlan replaced the papers he had taken from his pocket and slowly buttoned his coat.

"It's just because we never undertake anything here unless we can work it with enthusiasm and confidence that I suggest disposing of the Kennard matter first," persisted Croyned. "You feel pretty sure of getting your man, but in case you don't, your recourse is a fight. Wall street won't like that; it won't buy rights. You're bound to win. All right, but Wall Street will stand on one side until the shindig's over. Once get the Street into it and you can cut a slash to your heart's content, but I tell you, Mr. Harlan, you've got to disclose profits and not cut-throat competition on your first show-down."

Both men were silent for a moment, each hesitating to make the next move. Then Trundell spoke for the first time since his partner entered the room.

"I tell you what, Harlan," he began, "leave all your papers with us here and let us study them. Meet us at Delmonico's at eight to-night, and we'll dine together and talk the matter to a finish. I'll telephone for a private room, so we won't be disturbed."

"Very well."

Mr. Harlan took the bundle of papers from his pocket, handed it to Croyned, gathered up his hat, coat and gloves and with a few easy phrases left the partners to themselves.

For a few moments neither spoke. Then Mr. Trundell again broke the silence.

"Let's go up to the Racquet club, Nell, and take a Turkish bath."

"And read these papers there?"

Croyned raised his eyebrows as he spoke.

"Read nothing! You hit the nail on the head, Nell. He's got to get Kennard."

"But suppose he won't and trots off to some one else?"

Mr. Trundell smiled.

"After he's told us all he knows? I guess not. You've a shrewd head for some things, Nell, but you don't know everything yet. Tell the stenographer to make a copy of these papers and have the originals at the club by six o'clock. Then let's go up town—I'm sick of the office."

CHAPTER V.

It was past midnight and the elevated trains were running at 20-minute intervals when Mr. Harlan left Delmonico's and walked absent-mindedly toward Sixth avenue. The little dinner party had unsettled some of his plans and made him anxious about others. All the facts and figures and arguments at his command had failed to shake his host's opinion that John Kennard's Sons must be included in the syndicate. As voiced by Trundell, it sounded like a decision rather than an opinion, and gave him plenty to think about.

When the brakes of the next train shrieked and squealed their hideous summons, he entered a car mechanically.

Cure For The Blues

ONE MEDICINE THAT HAS NEVER FAILED

Health Fully Restored and the Joy of Life Regained

When a cheerful, brave, light-hearted woman is suddenly plunged into that perfection of misery, the BLUES, it is a sad picture. It is usually this way: She has been feeling "out of sorts."

Mrs. Rosa Adams

For some time, head has ached and back ached; she slept poorly, been quite nervous, and nearly fainted once or twice; head dizzy, and heart-beats very fast; then that bearing-down feeling, and during her menstrual period she is exceedingly despondent. Nothing pleases her. Her doctor says: "Cheer up; you have dyspepsia; you will be all right soon."

But she doesn't get "all right," and hope vanishes; then come the brooding, morbid, melancholy, everlasting BLUES.

Don't wait until your sufferings have driven you to despair, with your nerves all shattered and your courage gone, but take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. See what it did for Mrs. Rosa Adams, of 119 12th Street, Louisville, Ky., niece of the late General Roger Hanson, U.S.A. See writes: "Dear Mrs. Pinkham:

"I cannot tell you with pen and ink what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me. I suffered with female troubles, extreme lassitude, 'the blues,' nervousness, and that all-gone feeling. I was advised to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and it not only cured my female derangement, but it has restored me to perfect health and strength. The brooding, morbid, melancholy, and I do not suffer for any longer with despondency, as I did before. I consider Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a boon to sick and suffering women."

If you have some derangement of the female organism write Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass., for advice.

ically, instinctively left it at Twenty-third street, walked to Fifth avenue, crossed the tangle of tracks and the diagonal of Madison Square, conscious, but not noting the shadowy figures huddled or stretched upon the iron benches; conscious, but heedless of the footstep which began to follow him before half the desolate square was passed.

Reaching his house on the east side of the square, Mr. Harlan mounted the steps, but stopped and glanced back as the tread of feet became more distinct. Then he faced the door again and deliberately fumbled over the lock. The sound came nearer and nearer, but he took no notice until the pedestrian stopped before the house and mounted two or three steps. Then Mr. Harlan swung swiftly about and faced his pursuer. The light from a street lamp made the revolver in his hand glitter.

"Well, my friend," he remarked, slowly, "since you've overtaken me at last, allow me to ask if you want anything."

"It's just because we never undertake anything here unless we can work it with enthusiasm and confidence that I suggest disposing of the Kennard matter first," persisted Croyned. "You feel pretty sure of getting your man, but in case you don't, your recourse is a fight. Wall street won't like that; it won't buy rights. You're bound to win. All right, but Wall Street will stand on one side until the shindig's over. CHAPTER VI.

The horse show bored Mrs. Parsons, and she had the courage to admit it. But when some one asked why she continued to go there year after year, she replied briskly, "Because it's such a becoming habit, my dear. The questioner smiled feebly at the answer without fully comprehending it."

It was unnecessary to ask Miss Carroll Parsons why she attended the horse show. You could see it in her eyes as she watched the sluggish human river flowing beneath the boxes; you could hear it in her laugh as she talked over her shoulder; you could see it in the heightened color and the merry smile lighting her face. Miss Parsons was there for fun, and she was having it.

A ripple of applause heard above the crashing band caused the occupants of the boxes to glance at the ring, where the attendants had been setting up spruce and hurdles. A number of hooded and blanketed hunters led by smart, uniformed grooms were just entering the arena.

"Oh, Leslie, look!" cried Miss Parsons to the girl beside her; "they're bringing in the hurdles and we'll see the jumping. That's always so exciting. And there's Mr. Croyned; he must be competing, he's dressed for riding—Good-evening, Mr. Croyned. Certainly. Do come up."

Miss Parsons leaned back in her chair as the young man released her hand and moved toward the nearest entrance.

"You know him, don't you, Leslie?" she asked her companion.

"No."

"I'm so glad, because now I can claim the credit of introducing you to each other. He's such a good fellow."

all the men. I'm on one of the minor committees of the local union and—"

"Yes, I see your finish," interrupted Mr. Harlan. "You're hopeless, McManis. I got you a good political job with McGrath and you lost it by drinking, and now you've got a start with Cavendish you are going to get yourself bounced by mixing up in some damned union business. The trouble with you is there's always somebody ready at your elbow to put you on your feet when you tumble down, and you don't appreciate the value of a fair start. Sometimes I think the worst mistake I ever made was to save you a term in the penitentiary. A few years behind the bars might have taught you something."

McManis shot an angry glance at his host, and tugged fiercely at his stubby mustache for some moments before he answered sullenly:

"But I haven't lost my job and I tell you I've quit drinking."

"But you're working and get yourself kicked out of your union committee and such folly."

"How do you know it's folly?"

"Oh, never mind—go on. I'm not going to argue with you."

"All right, I'm on the local committee, as I told you, and a delegate to the general convention which opens to-morrow in Philadelphia. If I could get some decent clothes, shed these greasy, shiny rags, and go there with friends and show a little independence I believe I'd be elected to an office worth—"

"And promptly get yourself kicked out of the tool company."

"They wouldn't dare kick me out. But I'd resign quick enough, I promise you."

"And come to me for another $50 to support your position in proper style? Think you."

"No, I'd return your $50. I'd have a good salary and could make something more on the side. I'd have work that suited me, some independence and authority, and—"

"Yes, I fancy you in authority! You've had good practice in trying to command yourself."

"And I've done it," retorted McManis, sharply. "Haven't I stopped drinking?"

"But who is going to pay you this salary, and what are you supposed to do for it?"

"The general union pays it. The officers are the master workman and his assistants, of whom I'd be one. The duties include traveling about the country, looking into the conditions of workmen, hearing their grievances, laying them before the employers, demanding reforms, ordering strikes on and off, and in general, keeping the forces together for united action of every kind."

"In other words, you're to levy petty blackmail on workmen and grand blackmail on their employers for the benefit of the officers of the league."

"You may put it that way if you choose," answered the visitor, bitterly. "I'm not in a position to position you to-night. I'm asking for a loan."

"A loan?"

"Mr. Harlan fairly snorted the word. 'Which I'll pay back if I'm elected,' added McManis, persistently."

"And what chance have you of being elected?"

"Every chance. I'm better educated than most of the men. My two years at college didn't teach me much, but they put me ahead of my present associates—and some of my past ones. I've knocked about the world a good deal. I've seen something of this city's money makers and their ways. I'm a member of Tammany Hall."

"There's an education for you!" observed Mr. Harlan.

"Don't underestimate its value," retorted McManis, meaningly. "I'm popular with my fellow-workmen," he continued. "I can make the sort of speech you like to hear. I've every chance, I think."

Mr. Harlan put his hand in his pocket, pulled forth a roll of bills, and counted out $50.

"I'm going to give you this money, Pete," he said slowly. "Of course I knew I had to do that when I let you into the house. But mind, this is my limit. If you don't get elected, don't come to me again, for I promise you it's your last draft on my pocket. And mind this, too. Whether you're elected or not, I don't want you to come to this house again. If you ever get a fit to pay the money back—which I don't expect you can come to the office of the Milling Companies. Do you understand?"

"Of course, I don't want to annoy you."

"All right, then. Here, take some more cigars. Good-night."

CHAPTER VI.

The horse show bored Mrs. Parsons, and she had the courage to admit it. But when some one asked why she continued to go there year after year, she replied briskly, "Because it's such a becoming habit, my dear. The questioner smiled feebly at the answer without fully comprehending it."

"You know him, don't you, Leslie?" she asked her companion.

"No."

"I'm so glad, because now I can claim the credit of introducing you to each other. He's such a good fellow."

Papa thinks he's one of the cleverest men down town. Thank goodness, I haven't prejudiced you against him by singing his praises. I warn you, mamma, and I get regularly jealous of one another whenever Mr. Croyned calls. Don't we, mother?"

The girl looked back mischievously at her mother and patted her hand.

"You're an impossible child, Carroll. But I suppose you're used to her, Miss Harlan."

"You never could get used to any one so original as your daughter, Mrs. Parsons. She is the personification of the unexpected. It's her charm."

"That will do for you, Leslie. Here comes my masculine ideal. Good-evening again, Nell. Miss Harlan, allow me to present Mr. Croyned, a flame of my mother."

"A flame that goes out too often, I should say," remarked Mrs. Parsons, as the young man greeted her. "What have you been doing with yourself, Nell? You look out of sorts. Too much work down town and too much play up town? That's what makes us a nation of dyspeptics."

"Now, Mrs. Parsons, is it fair to criticize me before this critical daughter of yours?"

"Possibly not, but perhaps—Yes, I see—this is your first public appearance."

"Exactly. If I'm pale, it's stage fright. But then I'm part of the show, and no one's supposed to look at that."

"When do you ride?" asked Miss Harlan.

"What is your horse?" broke in Miss Parsons. "What is his name, what is his number—what does he do—what do you do? Come, sit right down and tell us all about it."

"I will if I can remember all of those questions. Let's see. What is my horse? Well, he's a hunter, and, of course, a splendid jumper. His name is Thanatos, and my number, curiously enough, is 13—"

"Why 'curiously'?" interrupted Miss Parsons.

"Because 'Thanatos' means 'death,' I believe, and 13 is supposed to be unlucky."

"Oh, I don't like that," responded the girl, with a shudder.

"You're not superstitious, are you?"

"No—yes—yes, I think I am. Aren't you, Leslie?"

"Not about such things. Do you expect to win, Mr. Croyned?"

"I certainly do. I never go into anything without expecting to win. It's half the battle."

"And you never suffer from over-confidence?"

"Not in the long run. People who believe too little in themselves fall far oftener than those who overestimate their ability."

"Or their horse's?"

Croyned looked at his fair questioner with surprise. But he smiled pleasantly as he answered:

"Of course in this case the horse is entitled to most of the credit. But every one knows an intelligent animal will interpret his rider's mood with surprising accuracy. By Jove, what a good one!" he exclaimed, pointing down at the ring where a gray horse had just cleared an "in and out" jump.

"Do you have to do that?" asked Miss Parsons, as the volley of applause died away.

Mr. Croyned apparently did not hear the inquiry, for he was gazing at the crowd, his eyes following one of the moving figures. When the girl repeated her question he started.

"I beg your pardon. Yes, I have to clear the same hurdles. It's not as hard as it looks. By the way, Miss Harlan, I have the pleasure of knowing your father very well. Isn't he here to-night?"

"I think he must be. He was to come at ten o'clock. You weren't watching him, were you?"

"No, but I thought I saw a friend of his—Mr. Kennard. By the way, Miss Harlan, I have the pleasure of knowing your father very well. Isn't he here to-night?"

CHAPTER IV.

It was past three o'clock in the afternoon. The ticker in Trundell, Croynen & Co.'s office had clicked and whirled its final quotations, spelled "good-night," made a trial of its alphabet for morning use, and stopped. The customers' room with its light blue haze of tobacco smoke seemed to take on a different aspect the moment the ticker ceased talking, just as the familiar surroundings of the ocean liner seem to change as soon as the timeless screw stops turning. The well-dressed, cheerful watcher of quotations tore a leaf from his pad, re-marked to the nearest customer that "the close looked mighty well for the opening to-morrow," and passed into the clerical department. Mr. Croynen emerged from his private room and spoke a few words to each customer, whispering earnestly with one, looking down on the floor or out of the window while another spoke to him, listening with the air which says, "Go on, old man! I'm drinking in the word you say, but I don't want to let the others know how important I think it." But if the communication lasted too long, Mr. Croynen would turn suddenly, place a hand on the speaker's shoulder and say: "By Jove, I think you're right! I want to talk with you about that to-morrow," and this would be accompanied by a look which would send the customer off convinced of having made a decided impression upon Cornelius Croynen.

One by one the customers drifted away until Mr. Croynen was alone. Then he lit a cigarette and moved to the window, out of which he stared, one foot on the cushioned window-seat, his elbow perched on his bent knee and his chin resting on his hand. Mr. Croynen never seemed to be busy. But the customers who made this observation were not to blame for their error. The junior partner's work was done mainly after they left. That the most important business of Wall street is transacted after the ticker ceases is something which customers never seem to grasp. Perhaps if they did they might cease to be customers.

Thus Mr. Croynen, staring out of the window at the marble wall across the narrow street, was merely taking a short recess before beginning the real work of the day.

"Come along, Nell. He's here," Croynen turned and saw Mr. Trundell standing at the threshold of his private office, his hand on the door-knob. The junior partner tossed his cigarette aside and entered the elder man's room.

The personality of the owner of this room was in entire harmony with its general air of luxury. Mr. Richard Trundell was a man about 50 years of age, full-blooded and a trifle portly. Had he not carried himself so well and dressed with such care, nothing could have saved him from being considered fat. His face was typical of high living, and the little tell-tale sacks under his eyes gave him a sleepy and sometimes a heavy look.

But those who had seen the gentleman clean-shaven never trusted him implicitly or waded long on his sleepy look. Without his mustache Mr. Trundell showed a mouth as cruel and hard as any ever seen in a human face. It was a large mouth with thin lips drawn tightly across the teeth and corners drooping—a sneering, sensual, animal mouth, which laughter only made savage and angry. Every feature of the man's face was in harmony with his mouth, but Mr. Trundell's lip was seldom shaved.

Croynen, seeing no visitor in the room, looked inquiringly at his partner.

Mr. Trundell settled himself before the fire with his back to the blaze, spread his legs apart, and answered the unspoken question by jerking his head toward the private hall. Croynen nodded comprehendingly.

"Are we to go into this thing, Dick?" he asked in a low voice.

"I haven't fully worked it out yet," "Well, what stand are you to take?" "That's just what I wanted to talk with you about. I rather think it's a better and bigger thing than appears at first sight, but there may be a hitch somewhere. You know the general scheme, but draw him out until we have all the particulars. Don't let him get away and don't count on anything. By Friday or Saturday I'll have worked out whether it's good for little, nothing, or much. I think you'd better go now and come back in about ten minutes' time—accidental-like. If he thinks we're being consulting, he'll be too close-mouthed."

Trundell rang the bell as his junior partner left the room. "Show Mr. Harlan in," he ordered, as a clerk answered the summons.

When the visitor appeared at the door the head of the firm was busy writing letters.

"How do you do, Mr. Harlan?" he exclaimed, without rising from his seat, and holding out his left hand in greeting. "Sorry to keep you waiting, but I had some pressing correspondence on hand and wanted to complete it, so we wouldn't be interrupted. No, not at all—sit down. I'm just finishing. Croynen will be here in a moment. Reynolds look for Mr. Croynen and tell him Mr. Harlan is here. Have a cigar, won't you? How splendidly you're looking! Been on a vacation?"

"No—too busy for vacations just now; but work always agrees with me, and there's no place suits me so well as this seaside resort."

"How do you do, Mr. Harlan?" said Croynen coming into the room. "Well, how goes the syndicate, anyway?"

"I think everything is ready if you gentlemen are. I have all the necessary facts and figures, and the assurance of co-operation from practically every important interest involved."

Cure For The Blues

ONE MEDICINE THAT HAS NEVER FAILED

Health Fully Restored and the Joy of Life Regained

When a cheerful, brave, light-hearted woman is suddenly plunged into that perfection of misery, the BLUES, it is a sad picture. It is usually this way: She has been feeling "out of sorts."

For some time, head has ached and back also; has slept poorly, been quite nervous, and nearly fainted once or twice; head dizzy, and heart-beats very fast; then that bearing-down feeling, and during her menstrual period she is exceedingly despondent. Nothing pleases her. Her doctor says: "Cheer up; you have dyspepsia; you will be all right soon." I suffered with female troubles, extreme lassitude, the blues, nervousness and that all-gone feeling. I was advised to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and it not only cured my female derangement, but it has restored me to perfect health and strength. The lassitude of my younger days has returned, and I do not suffer any longer with despondency, as I did before. I consider Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a boon to sick and suffering women.

If you have some derangement of the female organism write Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass., for advice.

ically, instinctively left it at Twenty-third street, walked to Fifth avenue, crossed the tangle of tracks and the diagonal of Madison Square, conscious, but not noting the shadowy figures huddled or stretched upon the iron benches; conscious, but heedless of the footsteps which began to follow him before half the desolate square was passed.

Reaching his house on the east side of the square, Mr. Harlan mounted the steps, but stopped and glanced back at the tread of feet became more distinct. Then he faced the door again and deliberately fumbled over the lock. The sound came nearer and nearer, but he took no notice until the pedestrian stopped before the house and mounted two or three steps. Then Mr. Harlan swung swiftly about and faced his pursuer. The light from a street lamp made the revolver in his hand glitter.

"Well, my friend," he remarked, slowly, "since you've overtaken me at last, allow me to ask if you want anything."

He tapped the weapon in his hand significantly. "Hold on, Josh," protested the man, in a low voice, "Don't be so ready with your gun. I'd have spoken sooner, but I didn't want to make any mistake."

Mr. Harlan peered down at the speaker for a moment.

"Oh, it's you, is it?" he exclaimed, irritably. "The man moved a little nearer, but made no answer."

"What do you want at this time of night?"

"Five minutes' talk."

"Worth how much a minute?"

"Much to me, a very little to you."

Mr. Harlan turned on his heel, slipped his revolver into his pocket, pulled out his keys, and opened the door.

"Come in," he muttered, impatiently, and say your say quickly. I'm tired."

Mr. Harlan closed the outside door before opening the inside, but his visitor entered the house.

For on entering the house passed directly into a rear room, as though thoroughly familiar with his surroundings, and seated himself without invitation opposite the library desk. In all this he seemed to count upon his host, for Mr. Harlan followed his visitor into the room, closed the door, pulled down the window-shades, drew the curtains, and then, turning on the electric light, seated himself in the revolving chair before the desk, pulled a cigar out of his pocket, pushed it toward his guest, lit another, and at last leaning forward with his elbow on the desk and his chin in his hand, said sharply:

"Now!"

"I'll begin with what I'm after, if you'd rather. I want $50."

"Why?"

"I know you'd want the reason."

"Well, get to it."

"It isn't a hard-luck story this time, Josh. It's a good-luck one. I want to make an investment."

"With my money. That ought to be perfectly safe for you."

"It'll be good for you, too. Listen now. I'm in the employ of the Cavendish Tool company. Yes, I've kept the job for six months, practically without touching a drop, I'm in with all the men. I'm on one of the minor committees of the local union and—

"Yes, I see your finish," interrupted Mr. Harlan. "You're hopeless, McManis, hopeless. I got you a good political job with McGrath and you lost it by drinking, and now you've got a start with Cavendish and you're going to get yourself bounced by mixing up in some damned union business. The trouble with you is there's always somebody ready at your elbow to put you on your feet when you tumble down, and you don't appreciate the value of a fair start. Sometimes I think the worst mistake I ever made was to save you a term in the penitentiary. A few years behind the bars might have taught you something."

McManis shot an angry glance at his host, and tugged fiercely at his stubby mustache for some moments before he answered sullenly:

"But I haven't lost my job and I tell you I've quit drinking."

"How do you know it's folly?"

"Oh, never mind—go on. I'm not going to argue with you."

"All right. I'm on the local committee, as I told you, and a delegate to the general convention which opens to-morrow in Philadelphia. If I could get some decent clothes, shed these greasy, shiny rags, and go there with some money in my pocket to make friends and show a little independence I believe I'd be elected to an office worth having."

"And promptly get yourself kicked out of the tool company."

"They wouldn't dare kick me out. But I'd resign quick enough, I promise you."

"And come to me for another $50 to support your position in proper style?"

"No, I'd return your $50. I'd have a good salary and could make something more on the side. I'd have work that suited me, some independence and authority, and—"

"Yes, I fancy you in authority! You've had good practice in trying to command yourself."

"And I've done it," retorted McManis, sharply, "Haven't I stopped drinking?"

"But who is going to pay you this salary, and what are you supposed to do with it?"

"The general union pays it. The officers are the master workman and his assistants, of whom I'd be one. The duties include traveling about the country, looking into the conditions of workmen, hearing their grievances, laying them before the employers, demanding reforms, ordering strikes on and off an in general, keeping the forces together for united action of every kind."

"In other words, you're to levy petty blackmail on workmen and grand blackmail on their employers for the benefit of the officers of the league."

"You may put it in that way if you choose," answered the visitor, bitterly. "I'm in a position to disprove you to-night. I'm asking for a loan."

"A loan!"

Mr. Harlan fairly snorted the word. "Which I'll pay back if I'm elected," added McManis, persistently.

"And what chance have you of being elected?"

"Every chance. I'm better educated than most of the men. My two years at college didn't teach me much, but they put me ahead of my present associates—and some of my past ones. I've knocked about the world a good deal. I've seen something of this country's politics, and you. I'm a member of Tammany Hall."

"There's an education for you!" observed Mr. Harlan.

"Don't underestimate its value," retorted McManis, meaningly. "I'm popular with my fellow-workmen," he continued. "I can make the sort of speech they like to hear. I've every chance. I think so."

Mr. Harlan put his hand in his pocket, pulled forth a roll of bills, and counted out $50.

"I'm going to give you this money, Pete," he said slowly. "Of course I knew I had to do that when I let you into the house. But mind, this is my limit. If you don't get elected, don't come to me again, for I promise you it's your last draft on my pocket. And mind this, too. Whether you're elected or not, I don't want you to come to this house again. If you ever get a fit to pay the money back—which I don't expect—you can come to the office of the Mutual Companies. Do you understand?"

"Of course. I don't want to annoy you."

"All right, then. Here, take some more cigars. Good-night."

CHAPTER VI.

The horse show bored Mrs. Parsons, and she had the courage to admit it. But when some one asked why she continued to go there year after year, she replied briskly, "Because it's such a becoming habit, my dear. The questioner sat and feebly at the answer without fully comprehending it."

It was unnecessary to ask Miss Carroll Parsons why she attended the horse show. You could see it in her eyes as she watched the sluggish human river flowing beneath the boxes; you could hear it in her laugh as she talked over her shoulder; you could see it in the heightened color and the merry smile lighting her face. Miss Parsons was there for fun, and she was having it.

A ripple of applause heard above the crashing band caused the occupants of the boxes to glance at the ring, where the attendants had been setting up spruce-twined hurdles. A number of hooded and blanketed hunters led by smart, uniformed grooms were just entering the arena.

"Oh, Leslie, look!" cried Miss Parsons to the girl beside her: "they're bringing in the hurdles and we'll see the jumping. That's always so exciting! And there's Mr. Croynen; he must be competing, he's dressed for riding—Good-evening, Mr. Croynen—Certainly. Do come up."

Miss Parsons leaned back in her chair as the young man released her hand and moved toward the nearest entrance.

"You know him, don't you, Leslie?" she asked her companion.

"No."

"I'm so glad, because now I can claim the credit of introducing you to each other. He's such a good fellow,

Papa thinks he's one of the cleverest men down town. Thank goodness, I haven't prejudiced you against him by singing his praises. I warn you, mamma, and I get regularly jealous of one another whenever Mr. Croynen calls. Don't we, mother?"

The girl looked back mischievously at her mother and patted her hand. "You're an impossible child, Carroll. But I suppose you're used to her, Miss Harlan."

"You never could get used to any one so original as your daughter, Mrs. Parsons. She is the personification of the unexpected. It's her charm."

"That will do for her, Leslie. Here comes my masculine ideal. Good-evening again, Nell. Miss Harlan, allow me to present Mr. Croynen, a flame of my mother."

"A flame that goes out too often, I should say," remarked Mrs. Parsons, as the young man greeted her. "What have you been doing with yourself, Nell? You look out of sorts. Too much work down town and too much play up town? That's what makes us a nation of dyspeptics."

"Now, Mrs. Parsons, is it fair to criticize me before this critical daughter of yours?"

"Possibly not, but perhaps—Yes, I see—this is your first public appearance."

"Exactly. If I'm pale, it's stage fright. But then I'm part of the show, and no one's supposed to look at that."

"When do you ride?" asked Miss Harlan.

"What is your horse?" broke in Miss Parsons. "What is his name, what is his number—what does he do—what do you do? Come, sit right down and tell us all about it."

"I will if I can remember all of those questions. Let's see. What is my horse? Well, he's a hunter, and of course, a splendid jumper. His name is Thanatos, and my number, curiously enough, is 13—"

"Why 'curiously'?" interrupted Miss Parsons. "Because 'Thanatos' means 'death,' I believe, and 13 is supposed to be unlucky."

"Oh, I don't like that," responded the girl, with a shudder.

"You're not superstitious, are you?"

"No—yes—yes, I think I am. Aren't you, Leslie?"

"Not about such things. Do you expect to win, Mr. Croynen?"

"Certainly do. I never go into anything without expecting to win. It's half the battle."

"And you never suffer from over-confidence?"

"Not in the long run. People who believe too little in themselves fall farther often than those who overestimate their ability."

"On the horse's part?"

Croynen looked at his fair questioner with surprise. But he smiled pleasantly as he answered:

"Of course in this case the horse is entitled to most of the credit. But every one knows an intelligent animal will interpret the rider's mood with surprising accuracy. By Jove, what a good one!" he exclaimed, pointing down at the ring where a gray horse had just cleared an "in and out" jump.

"Do you have to do that?" asked Miss Parsons, as the volley of applause died away.

Mr. Croynen apparently did not hear the inquiry, for he was gazing at the crowd, his eyes following one of the moving figures. When the girl repeated her question he started.

"I beg your pardon. Yes, I have to clear the same hurdles. It's not as hard as it looks. By the way, Miss Harlan, I have the pleasure of knowing your father very well. Isn't he here to-night?"

"I think he must be. He was to come at ten o'clock. You weren't watching him, were you?"

"No, but I thought I saw a friend of his—Mr. Kennard," the girl said.

"Oh, I know him," the girl laughed. "Why do you laugh?"

"I was thinking of the way we met. It was such fun."

"Tell me about it," interrupted Miss Parsons. "We know him, too."

Who? John Kennard, poor Clyde Dehfield's partner?" asked Mrs. Parsons.

"I believe so," answered Croynen. "This is evidently a confidence," he continued, glancing at the girls, who had drawn close together. "Will you take me under your protection?"

Mr. Croynen's eyes were riveted on the procession as he spoke, and he continued to gaze steadily at it while with that peculiar side turn of the head he indicated the most flattering attention to Mrs. Parsons' remarks. Suddenly Miss Parsons turned to him and tapped him with her fan.

"Are you sure you saw John Kennard, Nell?"

"I was not, but I am now," he answered. "Why?"

"I want you to attract his attention in some way, Leslie's had such a funny experience with him at a dinner, and I think it'd be great sport to see them meet again."

"Won't you let us all in on the experience, Miss Harlan?"

"It's not worth repeating, and I hope you won't pay the slightest attention to Carroll's suggestion."

"Miss Parsons' wishes are my commands," he replied. "I'll fetch Kennard at once."

"Please don't."

"I must," he insisted, "unless Miss Parsons countermands. No, I can obey you both, for here he comes."

As Miss Harlan turned Kennard reached the box.

"I began to fear," he observed, smilingly, as the girl leaned forward and held out her hand, "that we still required an introduction."

"No, I think not," she laughed. "You know Mrs. Parsons and Miss Parsons," she added, as Kennard greeted the rest of the party.

"Won't you join us?" asked Mrs. Parsons.

"Yes do," urged Carroll.

"I'm not in evening dress," began Kennard.

"Never mind."

"I must hurry off now," remarked Croynen, as Kennard accepted the invitation. "We shall be in the ring in five minutes. Wish us good luck, please—Thanatos and me," he added, with a slight bow toward Miss Harlan.

"Come back and show us the prize," commanded Mrs. Parsons.

"Yes, you know him, don't you, Leslie?"

"No."

"I'm so glad, because now I can claim the credit of introducing you to each other. He's such a good fellow,

"I shall if Thanatos will permit," he responded gravely.

Mr. Croynen hastened to the promenade, along which he treaded his way quickly until he reached one of the sloping entrances to the stables. Once there, however, all his hurry seemed to have expended itself, for he stopped in the passage-way and scanned the procession filing before him. For more than ten minutes he scarcely moved. Then he suddenly stepped forward and allowing himself to be sucked into the crowd, working his way along wherever an opening showed, never pushing or jostling anyone, but steadily advancing until he found himself directly behind the object of his pursuit.

"Good evening, Mr. Harlan," he began, as he stopped beside that gentleman. "Your daughter told me you were here. Kennard's with her in the Parsons' box now," he continued without waiting for the other's greeting.

"and I thought you might like the chance to get better acquainted," he continued. "Good Lord, Croynen, always thinking of business!" exclaimed the elder man. "Even in those togs?"

"But tho' on pleasure he was bent, he had a frugal mind," misquoted Croynen, with a meaning nod as he turned away toward the stables.

"There's a tyrant for you, Mr. Kennard! Do you wonder I look suppressed? But what have you done to the rest of your company, Leslie?"

"I might say they'd been sent out as a search-party for you, sir. But as a matter of fact they deserted us to inspect the stables, despite my protest that politeness to Mr. Croynen demanded their presence here."

"They'll be in plenty of time," answered Mr. Harlan. "I met Croynen on the promenade only a few moments ago. You know him, don't you, Mr. Kennard?"

"Yes, I think almost every one in town knows him more or less."

"A clever fellow. Does he ride well?"

"I don't know at all," answered Kennard.

"He says he does," interposed Miss Harlan. "At least he says he expects to win."

"Just like him," observed her father. "Croynen always expects to win."

"Yes he told me that too," answered Miss Harlan, demurely.

"Evidently without impressing you."

"I didn't give much thought to it. It sounded rather conceited, that's all."

"I think I owe you an apology for deceiving you the other night."

"Not at all. I should not have been so inquisitive about Mr. Harlan."

"It's very good of you to regard it in that way, but I've been feeling terribly guilty about my ruse for putting you off the track. I hoped at first you knew father and would talk about him. It seemed such a good opportunity to hear him praised by somebody who didn't know his daughter was listening."

"And you were sure I would praise him?"

"Of course," she laughed frankly. "Everybody does."

"He could have no greater tribute than your thought gave him."

"I don't see that. When you know him you'll understand why I couldn't help thinking so. Do you ride?" she asked suddenly.

"At one time," he began.

"Oh, I remember," she interrupted. "You only ride hobbies now—isn't that it?"

"A hobby would be more exact."

"And some day you're going to put it through its paces for me, aren't you, please?"

"Oh, no. It's only a workhorse and plods along very uninterestingly."

"I would like to judge for myself. Actions speak louder than words."

"If you wish I shall be glad to show you over the factory some day."

"Will you? I should love it. When may we go?"

Before Kennard could answer he heard a step behind him, and Miss Harlan was greeting her father.

"There you are, dear!" she began. "I've been wondering what was keeping you so long. You must reform now. Don't look so wickedly resigned." she continued gayly, "because Mr. Kennard's just invited us to visit his factory, and unless you're repentant, I won't promise to take you."

"The closest observer would hardly have noticed the sudden twitch of Mr. Harlan's eyelids as he shook hands with Kennard while his daughter was speaking, and no note of surprise sounded in his voice as he laughingly exclaimed:

The annual reception of the high school alumni was held in the Y. M. C. A. last Wednesday evening. A large number of the graduates and their guests were present and the occasion was a very pleasant one. A short program, consisting of a piano solo by Miss Mabel Paul, a vocal solo by Mrs. Ada Stevens and a band duet by Mrs. Estelle Bohndell and Miss Grace Banks, was much enjoyed. Frank H. Ingraham in behalf of the alumni, presented to the high school a fine crayon portrait of Charles F. Richards, which was accepted by Dr. A. F. Piper in behalf of the school board.

Mr. Richards was a teacher in the high school here from the spring of 1887 to the fall of 1890, and afterwards for many years was a member of the school board. He has always taken a great interest in the young people of Rockport and in all educational work has been very active. No other portrait would be more appropriate and fitting and more appreciated in the high school room than his.

The business meeting was then held and the officers elected for the ensuing year were: President, Frank H. Ingraham; vice president, Mrs. Winslow F. Dillingham; secretary, Miss Mabel Paul; chairman of executive committee, Miss Mabel Paul; chairman of finance committee, Miss Mabel Paul. Refreshments of ice cream and cake were served.

Some People are Bland to Chances.

It is dangerous to wait for the unexpected until it becomes a habit. Energy and inclination for hard work ooze out in the waiting. Opportunity becomes invisible to those who are doing nothing or looking somewhere else for it. It is the great worker, the man who is alert for chances, that sees them.

Some people become so opportunity blind that they cannot see chances anywhere—they would pass through a gold mine without noticing anything precious—while others will find opportunities in the most barren and out of the way places. Builyan found opportunity in Bedford jail to write the greatest allegory in the world on the unsatisfied prisoner that had been used to cork his bottles of milk. A Theodore Parker or a Lucy Stone sees an opportunity to go to college in a chance to pick berries. One boy sees an opening to his ambition in a chance to chop wood, wait on table or run errands, where another sees no chance at all. One sees an opportunity to get an education in the odds and ends of time evenings and half holidays, which another throws away.—Orson Sweet Marden in Success Magazine.

APPLETON

The Fourth passed off here with the usual night-before demonstration by the "boys" firing guns and crackers, breaking into the Baptist church, ringing the bell, breaking the bell rope, taking it to the post office, and so on.

From the store and affixing it to V. O. Keller's blacksmith shop and a few minor funny transactions, and ending with a grand ball at the Ritzville.

About the middle of June, bills were posted about town announcing that "Prof. Holland of Boston, magician, would give an entertainment and dance at Riverside hall July 4th. Admission 15 cents."

When the time arrived for the doors to the hall to be opened a large crowd of our people were present and ready to buy tickets. One hundred and fifty tickets were sold.

The show to be open came "Prof. Holland" turned out to be our old friend and townsman Walter H. Newbert of Boston. Well, the "Doctor" gave us a fine entertainment, performing many clever tricks in magic or legions and so on, as the bills stated "pleasing old and young alike."

The dance was enjoyed by a large company of young people, and all who attended the entertainment and dance are expressing the wish that Walter will give his many friends here another "good time" on some future occasion.

G. H. Page arrived home Friday from a trip to Bath and Portland.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Weston, daughter, Miss Marion, and son,

WARREN

Warren Smith returned Thursday from Boston, where he passed three weeks with his son, C. Smith.

Miss Margaret Clements, who has been in Massachusetts on her vacation, returned Saturday to resume her duties at the post office.

Miss Nellie Butler has been supplying during her absence, W. L. Lawry will take his vacation soon.

Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Spear have leased the place at Sunset Point in which their hospitality was very much in evidence and this was one of the leading events of the day. Fish chowder, ice cream and cake served in abundance furnished a feast, which sustained well the record of the plantation.

The appreciation of the guests, was voiced by a representative from Matticus in an appropriate address.

While the merry laugh and cordial greeting were going around, strains of music from over the sea came floating to the shore. From one of the vessels in the harbor the band discoursed the sweetest airs to an audience not lacking in appreciation, as was evinced by their hearty applause.

As we listened to the sunset gun from the main land, the close of the day, we thought this little community had acted well its part in commemorating our national holiday.

But the work was not yet, for in the evening we watched a brilliant display of fireworks, and after that adjourned to the school-house to listen to a phonograph concert given through the courtesy of Clarence Adams of Vinalhaven.

This closed a celebration unique and interesting from start to finish, doing great credit to its projectors, and all who aided in their labor and finances.

"Many happy returns!" Non Resident.

The Bennett-Moulton Co. will open a three nights' engagement at the opera house next Monday evening, playing at popular prices. The Camden correspondent says of this company: "A Belle of Virginia" was the attraction at the opera house last evening by the Bennett-Moulton Co. This company is one of the best on the road and they are deserving of the patronage they receive. The Bronze Melba is truly a wonder and her selections are received with well merited applause. Baby Berne is a cute little body and the specialties are all first class. Robert Lee is strong in the leading parts and the entire cast is composed of artists. Tonight's daughter of the People will be presented."

C. U. Russ writes as follows: "We are and have been for the past seven years been content without any celebration here on July 4th. We are cordially in favor of grave mistakes. We are asleep in a measure for there is no excuse for us as a town, as we have the ammunition and abundant means here to turn out and have a rousing celebration here on the Fourth. We have the state. We lack for nothing. We have got it, and it is a substantial fact that the name of Stonington in wealth, business, push and prosperity, equal to any in this state. No man or woman need starve here, even if we are planted on the rocks. There is just one thing lacking—some one has got to start the ball rolling, first as a last, regularity of public criticism. With encouragement one can accomplish many seemingly impossibilities. Why cannot we make Labor Day, Sept. 4, a day to be remembered here? We can and we will. Try never was beaten yet. We cannot tell what we are capable of producing until we do try, and if no one else will make a move for Labor Day, I will. I will try again July 4, 1906, if I am alive. First we can get a good band; second, we can have a parade in the morning of fireworks, etc.; third, a band concert; fourth, variety of races; fifth, march with band at 11 a. m. from Thurlow's barn to H. B. Smith's with reception each end of the route for half hour; sixth, dinner to be served by the Eastern Star, Congregational, Methodist and L. D. Saints societies, or any other society; seventh, 7 p. m. labor address; eighth, band concert in the square at 2 p. m. ball game at the park; band march to the park with concert while game is in session. Wake up the old as well as the young. Give all our hearts to sleep on, when we can produce the genuine article here. Russ' athletic park is open to the public for any engagement they wish to use it for—picnics, baseball, etc. free to all, except on special occasions. This park is situated on the Highlands of Stonington, on Western Promenade, and is one of the most picturesque views on the coast and easy to get to.

The Joshua Simpkins Co. will be at the opera house Wednesday evening of this week. The prices will be 25, 35 and 50 cents. This is one of the best companies now traveling in Maine.

CRIEHAVEN CELEBRATES.

Many Visitors Entertained With a Program Twenty-Four Hours Long.

Criehaven celebrated the Glorious Fourth in a manner in keeping with the public spirit and activity of its people.

The sounds of guns and fire crackers disturbed repose at an early hour, and opened a program, which steadily progressed in interest, until one felt that perpetual motion had been discovered, at last.

A large number participated in a flag raising at 9 o'clock, in which "Old Glory" was especially honored by a military salute of thirteen guns, followed by patriotic music by the Crie-haven band. This was succeeded by recitations by the children, appropriate to the occasion.

"America" by the band concluded the first exercise, in a very acceptable manner. A potato race in which young and old participated furnished amusement for all. The whistle from the steamer called all in that direction, and proceeded as she had never received at Crie

UNDER SPREADING ELM. Occurred the Marriage of Senator Sumner P. Mills, of Stonington.

A very pretty wedding occurred at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. William H. Pearson of Farmington, last Wednesday at high noon, when Miss Flora Alice Pearson became the wife of Hon. Sumner P. Mills, of Stonington. On account of the illness of the bride's father, the ceremony was entirely free from ostentation, and in the presence of only the immediate family relatives of the contracting parties.

The ceremony was performed out of doors under a spreading elm tree of the beautiful Pearson lawn, by Rev. H. L. Kilborn of Farmington, pastor of the Baptist church in that town. The bride was attended by her cousin, Miss Jennie Withereil of Oakland, Me., which took place at 1 o'clock Thursday afternoon at the beautiful summer home of the bride's cousin, Franklin Noyes Calderwood. Although the residence of North Haven, Miss Downs is a graduate of Westbrook Seminary and has spent much time with Mr. and Mrs. Calderwood, Mr. Calderwood gave the wedding for the bride. The house which was built last year, is very attractive in its architecture, is admirably adapted to a function of this sort, and with its large living room and broad hall lent itself to the decoration with excellent effect. The greens in garlands and the ferns were brightened with white peonies and other flowers and the dining room was decorated with white peonies and other flowers. Even the piazza came in for its share of treatment and with its superb view was an ideal spot for the guests to linger and enjoy the delicious refreshments and the music.

The bridal pair stood under an arch of green from which was suspended a wedding bell. The marriage ceremony was performed by the Rev. J. M. Atwood of the Church of the Messiah. The ring service was used. The bride's dress was a very dainty Swiss muslin which was extremely becoming. She had but one attendant, her maid of honor, Miss Alice Calderwood, who was gown'd in pompadour net over pink silk. The bride carried a large arm bouquet of white peonies and other flowers. The same fragrant floss in pink. The bride's gift to her maid of honor was a lovely backcomb. The groom was attended by his brother, Louis von Withereil, as the best man. The ushers were Messrs. Dr. Nathan P. Thayer of the Long Island hospital, L. L. Harry Clifton Calderwood of Biddeford, Melville Greely Calderwood of Portland and Charles Mathew Chapman of Rockland.

The dining room Miss Lillian Downs, a sister of the bride, who lives in Haverhill, served ices and on the piazza Miss Marie Fairbanks dipped punch.

The young couple will spend their honeymoon at the home of the bride's parents in Oakland. The going-away dress of Mrs. Withereil was a very stylish, costume of blue tulle, with a hat to match. Dr. Withereil is a graduate of Westbrook Seminary, where he was a student with his bride, of Colby College and Harvard Medical School.

He is now considering, but he has not quite decided where he will settle. There were a great many lovely presents.

CODMAN CASE ARGUED. Merits of the Indictment Against Episcopal Bishop Heard by Judges.

Arguments were made in the Law Court at Portland Saturday morning, in the case of the State against Rt. Rev. Bishop Codman, bishop of the diocese of Maine of the Protestant Episcopal church, for criminal libel. The case went to Law Court on a demurrer to the indictment. W. H. Hilton of Boothbay Harbor, county attorney for Lincoln county, argued for the State and Hon. E. C. Hughes of Bath for Bishop Codman.

At the April term of the Supreme Court sitting for Lincoln county, the grand jury brought an indictment against Bishop Codman for criminal libel. W. Howard Gardner of Camden, a former member of the Episcopal church, alleged that during trouble in the church at Dresden, of which Rev. Mr. Plant was rector, the bishop wrote a letter to Mr. Plant, in which Mr. Plant was referred to as an excommunicated member of the church. Mr. Gardner said that while he was no longer a member of the church he had never been excommunicated and made a complaint which resulted in the indictment of the bishop for writing the letter and Mr. Plant for reading it.

Mr. Hughes argued that the indictment was insufficient in that there were apparently two gardeners named in the indictment, one in Camden in the county of Knox and one of Camden in the county of Lincoln. He also argued that the letter was a privileged communication.

The Battleship Ball Team Enjoys a Summer Picnic With Y. M. C. A.'s—Camden Comes This Afternoon.

Rockland Y. M. C. A. was completely outdone in the game with U. S. S. Texas Saturday afternoon, and it was made manifest to everybody that a stronger team must be presented by Manager Brunberg if he expects to interest the spectators. It is very commendable to give the sailors a nice time while they are here, but we mustn't give them all the ball games or Rockland will lose her reputation as a good sporting town.

The team which represented the Y. M. C. A. Saturday was by no means the strongest that could be put together here, even the team failed to do itself justice, and the result at times bordered on farce comedy. Offsetting this the Texas team played almost perfectly, and batted like veterans. As a matter of fact it takes a mighty smart team to defeat Capt. Bicknell's boys.

The Camden combination did it Fourth of July, but the Texas boys are willing to bet next month's pay that the result will be different when the same team meet on the Broadway ground next Thursday afternoon. However, that's a different game.

Texas did practically all her scoring in three innings Saturday. Pauline hit and three bases on balls netted the warships three runs in the first inning. In the fourth inning four notches were in the stick as the Texas team took a double by Sink, singles by Justice and Young, and a very bad muff by Marshall. The fifth inning was a batting carnival in which the battleship poured its surplus energy on the other Doherty's Sink, Rourke, and Young each made doubles, Lang a home run and Justice a single; result, three earned runs.

Another score was made in the seventh inning in a rather unusual manner. Lieut. Halford hit a long fly toward the center field fence and in the midst of the spectators it was a toss-up whether it landed inside or outside the ground. McLean ran clear to first and the fence and managed to reach it with one hand but the ball bounced from the bedtick into Wade's current bushes.

Buckley vaulted the fence, pulled up a bush in a hasty attempt to get the ball, but when the sphere was returned to the diamond the Lieutenant of Marines had circled the bases and reduced the Texas weight.

Y. M. C. A. was a strong game for the visitors, no more than one hit being made off him in any inning. He was well supported by every member on the team. In the seventh inning Dr. Bickford led off with a single and got as far as third base on a wild throw, but the next three men succumbed to the prowess of "Cy" Young.

The score:

Two base hits, Sink, 2, Rourke, Young, Home runs, Halford and Lang. Bases on balls, off Young, 1, off Doherty 5. Struck out, by Young, 8, by Doherty 5. Umpire, Wilson O. Thomaston.

The Camden team for the combination which represented Camden July Fourth has accepted the Texas team's challenge to play two games this week, one on the Broadway grounds Thursday, and one at Camden next Saturday afternoon. The game of the fourth was won by Camden, 12 to 6, but Texas swears by all her muscles that it was a mistake—that they had eaten too much dessert; etc., etc. The game this afternoon will give the local selectors a chance to judge for themselves.

The Kennistons boys are making good on the Augusta team in the Kennebec trolley league. The Kennebec Journal has the following items in its issue of last Thursday:

"That Kenniston (whichever one it was) that caught Tuesday afternoon's game for Augusta was a great wing. The way he caught Don White at second was the prettiest seen yet.

Don's a lively article to nail, too."

"As was Kenniston's master of the situation and pitched the kind of ball that would have made him a winner in faster company than the Trolley League—hence the score. His brother also caught a perfect ball, his throwing to bases being of the best."

Chummy Gray writes from Johnston, N. Y. that the Scranton team has been considerably strengthened under new management, and is now making a better showing in the New York State League. He is one of six pitchers working in the turn-out. One of the boys who was one of his pitching mates and chums on the Buffalo team for five years, is now with Scranton and is pitching good ball. The Scranton team is now playing a series of home games, and Chummy would like a few letters from some of the boys. His address is Valley House, Scranton, Pa.

Gardner made only three hits off Harry Kenniston in Saturday's game with Augusta.

Announcement was made yesterday that Lou Dillon and Major Delmar, the only two minute trotters in the world, will be seen in a match race at Detroit, July 24 to 28. The Detroit Driving Club will give a handsome gold cup to the winner.

It is feared that Lajole will never play ball again. The famous captain of the Cleveland Indians has for the third time, been under the knife of the surgeon, this time for an injured ankle. Blood poisoning, it is said, is spreading rapidly and the most serious results are feared.
